

"Really? Is That So?"

Sad! Sad! Sad! I sat here shaking my head with disbelief as I reflected on the pure disgrace of TDCJ's arrogance. It reminded me of the military junta in Burma who had become so arrogant in their tyrannic dictatorship that they actually believed that the very people they oppressed had grown to love them. An arrogance so idiotic that they implemented elections against Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi who is the daughter of the assassinated general Aung San who is revered as the father of Burmese independence. Needless to say, the junta lost the election, but as with any arrogant dictator they refused to recognize the results of the election and continue to oppress the people of Burma to this very day. TDCJ officials maintain this level of arrogance, because no matter how much the prisoners prove cases of civil rights violations, corruption, and/or deprivation/neglect - they continue to apply these oppressive and inhumane methods. The word 'sardonic' comes to mind when I think about TDCJ and its officials.

It's sad how blatant these violations are and what's even worse is the courts and society's inability to abolish these forms of intense oppression and abuse. However, in the light of due process, I will take the time to highlight these torments which are self-evident. I will bring forth allegations and at any opportunity possible I will also have evidence from their own machinations. Seems an unlikely goal, doesn't it? Well, TDCJ is so arrogant that it will provide the information which would condemn itself in any eye of Justice! Why? Why not?! It hasn't stopped this travesty yet! Any attempt at reform has only led to worse conditions. The stigma of Death Row has only been used as an excuse to treat us worse! My purpose in presenting these fallacies in the system is not to vent my frustrations, but to give examples of why I must protest in a certain way in which I feel will attain a change. A change of path from injustice to propriety. From subjugation to security. Sadly, our sardonic overlords see subjugation as security, but the malice that subjugation breeds always erupts into a volatile outburst called revolution.

My first example will be simple. This is to ~~display~~ display TDCJ's inability to be consistent ~~or~~ and lack of moral compass or measure. This leads to injustice due to arrogance's turpitude....

At the beginning of September, I found myself in a situation where I was compelled to spit in the face of a TDCJ employee. For a more detailed description of that encounter, please reference an earlier article titled: "Inception". I was given a disciplinary case for this impudent act born from my righteous rage! I was run through the mockery of a discipline court and given 15 days of cell restriction.

At the beginning of October I was given a minor disciplinary case for refusing to comply with grooming standards by refusing to shave. An event so miniscule that it didn't warrant an article. Again, I was run through the mediocre system of kangaroo court. This time I was given 15 days recreation restriction and 15 days commissary restriction....

It's truly sad that I feel as if there are those who do not immediately grasp the imbalance of fairness here. So, let me explain.... I spit on a guard! That is an assault! Pure disrespect of a TDCJ employee and disregard for the rules and policy in the highest form. A major offense which I was given a lesser punishment than for a harmless minor case by 50%. So, should that encourage me to spit on guards? Apparently, my facial hair is more offensive than assaulting a guard! As proof, I am posting the disciplinary reports so that it's not seen as a hollow allegation. I'd like to think this proof as irrefutable. However, I plan on continuing to presenting more evidence. Get ready for a long journey!
